Noel Coward’s heart-breaking final play is given a reading at The Rhino, starring Giles Havergal in Coward’s most autobiographical role. Hugo Latymer is a world famous writer who has clawed his way to the top, leaving much bitterness in his wake. Carlotta is a former lover who knows secrets of his past which will make for a scathing memoir. Havergal (Scrooge in A.C.T.’s A Christmas Carol) joins Rhino regulars Libby O’Connell (Philanderer, Medea: The Musical, Beautiful Child) and Enrique Vallejo (Bent and Medea), and Rhino newcomer Trish Tillman (What the Butler Saw) in this comedy-drama about fame, infamy and the ever presence of the past. A Song at Twilight is Coward’s only openly gay text.

Story: In a smart hotel suite in Lausanne the distinguished author Hugo Latymer is expecting a dinner guest, the actress Carlotta Gray, with whom he had an affair many years before. But Carlotta has not come for an evening of nostalgia. Amidst the cocktails and laughter, Coward investigates the corrosive effect on the individual of living a lie and the right of the individual to keep his private life private.
