In FLIM-FLAM - A World-Premiere comedy, written & directed by John Fisher, three desperate actors take to the road in search of roles. Along the way they encounter highway hooligans, porno shoots, offended politically-correct youths and “all the crazies” of America. “All the world's a stage” and it's an actor's nightmare in this comedy about America “trying to be great again.”

Flim-Flam definition: noun: flim-flam -□nonsensical or insincere talk.
 verb: flim-flam- swindle (someone) with a confidence game.

*[Flim-Flam replaces the previously announced play Ding-Dong. This change was made because of the current changing nature of the American political landscape. John Fisher - the playwright - feels that FLIM-FLAM and its subject are more germane to the previously announced show. Ding-Dong will be presented in a subsequent season when and if things calm down politically.]*

Synopsis - FLIM-FLAM

Three actors are desperate for work. They try commercials, they try theatre, they even try movies of questionable repute but all fails. So they take their show on the road hoping to find employment in America's heartland. There they discover an America redder than red and a society on the verge of implosion and despair. Set in the present day, this comedy speaks to the darkest psyche of a troubled nation.
